
THE PRIMARY CARE COMPANION TO THE JOURNAL OF CLINICAL PSYCHIATRY

VOLUME 1

FEBRUARY 1999

NUMBER 1

The publication of this first issue of The Primary Care Companion to The Journal of Clinical Psychiatry marks an important milestone in the expanding treatment of behavioral disorders by primary care and OB/GYN specialists.

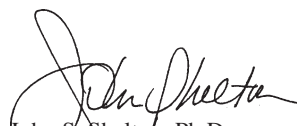

The Primary Care Companion to The Journal of Clinical Psychiatry is designed to aid the practitioner by providing important clinical information and insights. The articles published in the Companion will be authored, for the most part, by you—our readers. The publication of the Companion will provide a new and important vehicle for primary care researchers and clinicians to use when communicating with their colleagues.

The connection with The Journal of Clinical Psychiatry is also an important element of the Companion's publishing profile. During its illustrious 60-year history, The Journal of Clinical Psychiatry has published many articles that have relevance to primary care and OB/GYN physicians. However, this information was not directly available to you. Now, when papers appearing in The Journal of Clinical Psychiatry or its Supplements have applicability to our Companion readers, we may make them available for your information as well.

It is our intent with each issue of The Primary Care Companion to provide our readers with timely important clinical information in a variety of formats. To assist us in making the Companion an essential component of your information armamentarium, we welcome your submissions, comments, and suggestions. Our editorial "door" will always be open, and we can be contacted via mail, fax, or through the Internet at "primarycare@psychiatrist.com."
